2017 employer rates and maximum IMRF wages

January is the first month employers will begin calculating employer contributions using their 2017 employer rate. It's also an appropriate time to review maximum IMRF wages, which vary by Tier.

2017 employer rates

In November 2016, IMRF provided a Final Rate Notice for 2017 to all Authorized Agents. This document, located in the new Annual Documentation section of Employer Access, details your employer's 2017 contribution rate and includes contributions for:

- Retirement benefits: Calculated for each employer, based on actuarial costs.
- Death benefits: Calculated for each employer, based on the average age of its employees.
- Disability benefits: All employers pay the same rate.
- Supplemental benefit payment (13th Payment): The rate is fixed by statute; all employers pay the same rate.
- Early Retirement Incentive: If applicable.

Your employer's 2017 rate may also be located by selecting the "Wages and Contributions" menu option in Employer Access, then the "Display Contribution Rates" option. Your employer's contributions are automatically calculated in the wage report.

Maximum IMRF wages

Federal tax law limits the amount of wages that can be used for pension purposes. IMRF Tier 1 member wages do not include compensation in excess of $270,000 (in 2017). This limit applies to Tier 1 members who began IMRF participation in 1996 or after. Employers do not withhold IMRF contributions or report earnings for wages that exceed this limit.

For 2017, IMRF Tier 2 member wages do not include compensation in excess of $112,408.42. Employers should continue to report earnings over $112,408.42, but should not withhold IMRF contributions for wages exceeding this amount. IMRF will not accept contributions on wages over this amount for Tier 2 members.
